Concentrations

The history department divides all upper division courses into areas of interest, or "concentrations." All majors are required to choose a primary concentration. The idea is that with focused study, students will gain an in-depth understanding of their topic. Students will also take additional courses from other concentrations to enlarge the scope of their historical knowledge.

Antiquity and Medieval
Early Modern and Modern Europe
United States
Asia, Middle East and Latin America

Courses by Concentration

In reviewing the following list of concentrations and courses, keep in mind that new courses focused on specific topics relevant to professor’s research interests are offered every semester, though they may not be listed below.

Please note that one-hour courses and PACE courses cannot be counted toward a concentration.
